Asset management strategy

Between the health crisis driven by the rise of Omicron and movements on interest rates, volatility increased in December to finish with a rise of more than 5% for European stocks. Following statements made by central bankers indicating that they are reducing their accommodative monetary policy, the sovereign yield curve is likely to steepen as the year progresses. This movement on rates will have a negative impact on the performance of safe havens working to maintain a preference for cyclical sectors. Meanwhile, the decision announced by China in December to support its economy is supporting the commodities sector.

Against this background, the basic materials industry as well as healthcare and consumer staples (agri-food) outperformed consumer discretionary (retail, media) and technology and, to a lesser extent, utilities underperformed.

The fund underperformed the index, up 4.16% vs. 5.42% for the Stoxx 600 Europe.

The main contributions for the fund were mainly in the industrial sector with Schneider Electric, construction with Saint Gobain and Nibe, utilities with Enel and Acciona Energia and in technology, with software publisher SAP, which gained 10% over the month.

Although Schneider Electric is a long-standing conviction of the portfolio, arbitrage was carried out by selling Steico in isolation and introducing the Nordic stock NIBE. Following its investor day, Schneider Electric confirmed between +5% and +8% growth, with margin growth of between 30 and 70 basis points and cash flow generation of 4 bn. The company wants to increase its digital business to 60% by 2024, increase the share of services and take advantage of the opportunity of its business model to create ESG value by helping companies meet their decarbonisation trajectory (target is a reduction of 800 Mt in total between 2018 and 2025)

In mid-December, the European Commission presented its policy on the energy performance of buildings by introducing a minimum standard (MEPS) given that it estimates that at least 30 million buildings will have to go from grade G to F. Nibe will benefit from the expected wave of renovations by working on heating systems (heat pumps) and from the support of subsidies in 28 countries in Europe. Heat pumps are an important vehicle for reducing CO2 emissions. Nibe should continue its double-digit organic growth and expertly manage supply constraints. It will also be less affected in 2022 by the increase in commodity prices, which had weighed on margins. Its end markets are expected to remain strong, and its addressable market is significant: pump penetration is 2 to 8 units per 1000 inhabitants in Europe compared to 18 to 35 in the Nordic countries. The stock's valuation is high, but the growth outlook seems to justify it.

Negative contributions were made by consumer staples, which posted relative underperformance for Danone, DSM and profit-taking on Renewcell and Aker Carbon Capture.
