Asset management strategy

With the macroeconomic environment weakening as geopolitical conditions hardened, company results constituted the only solid information last month. Apart from in the metals and energy sectors, which faced the exceptional combination of a supply shock and rising prices, results as a whole surprised to the upside, helped by either strong business volumes or an ability to raise prices, in some cases by more than cost inflation.

Central banks confirmed their intention to continue tightening monetary policy, stoking fears – seemingly borne out by a deterioration in French and Germany confidence indicators – that this would erode consumer demand.

Markets turned down again last month, with the Stoxx 600 Europe losing 0.7% and the ACT4 Positive Economy fund losing 1.1%.

Apart from the energy sector, supported by oil prices, which averaged $97 a barrel in Q1 2022, the most resilient sectors were defensive ones like consumer staples, which led the pack, gaining 5.3%, utilities, telecoms and healthcare. The fund is not directly exposed to the oil and gas sector. The sectors that posted the biggest falls were technology, adversely affected by rising interest rates, and consumer discretionary (luxury goods, automotive).

The top positive contributors to the fund's performance were utilities, with strong performance from Biffa (waste collection and management), energy, thanks to renewable energy operator Acciona Energia, and consumer staples, with Danone posting strong gains (up 15%). Danone reported stronger than expected organic growth of 7.1%, thanks to economies reopening after Covid, and a sharp increase in operating profit, with a positive product mix in each of its categories. Growth stocks like Tomra Systems, Schneider and Lonza suffered heavily in the month despite reporting strong results. The emerging risk of a slowdown in China because of its highly restrictive public health policy shattered hopes that the Chinese economy might act as a growth driver to counter the expected global slowdown. Among positive economy solutions providers, Enogia, whose expertise in micro-turbomachinery supports energy transition by converting waste heat to electricity, reported reassuring results confirming a positive business trend and announced new business deals. Its business reaped the full benefit as borders reopened in 2021, with 76% of revenue coming from international sales, compared with only 31% in 2020.

There were few changes last month: apart from exiting Geberit, we mainly trimmed our positions in automotive equipment manufacturers Autoliv and Valeo as well as AstraZeneca, whose SRI rating was downgraded following the quarterly SRI review.
