Asset management strategy

Equity indices once again gained ground in August, with the Stoxx Europe 600 climbing 2.2%. Markets above all welcomed the balanced tone struck at Jackson Hole by the Fed, which is getting ready to taper its asset purchases but has no plans to hike interest rates for the time being. Yet there was no shortage of opportunities to take profits: leading indicators peaked, confirming the deceleration in economic activity, particularly in China, while the spread of the delta variant in Asia, where vaccination rates are low, prompted fresh restrictions that could put more pressure on already strained supply chains. However, the size of stimulus packages – like the Biden administration's infrastructure plan passed by the US Senate in mid-August – and confirmation of even more accommodative monetary policy remain key supports for economic growth in 2022.

Quarterly results season confirmed the scale of the recovery, which analysts had widely underestimated. Cyclical sectors such as industrials, consumer discretionary and those sectors helped by the sharp rise in commodity prices (energy, mining) posted the biggest surprises; against this backdrop, consumer staples were hit doubly hard (as a defensive sector affected by rising input prices).

The ACT4 Positive Economy fund gained 2.96% in the month, outperforming its benchmark, up 2.18%. The main driver of performance was stock selection.

At sector level, the main positive contributors were utilities on the back of strong results from Biffa (waste collection and processing), Orsted and Acciona Energias (in whose IPO the fund participated this summer). In industrials, Aker Carbon Capture racked up a 17% gain following a successful placement to finance its investment requirements. While carbon capture is not a brand new technology, the International Energy Agency considers it one of the top three ways to decarbonise ecosystems. Ramping up industrial carbon capture projects is a prerequisite for this. The number two contributor to performance was the healthcare sector thanks to Novo Nordisk and Lonza (subcontracting of research into and manufacturing of pharmaceutical molecules). Novo Nordisk reported strong results and, above all, announced in August that its Wegovy obesity treatment had been approved in China, where it can be marketed as a weekly formulation from 2022. The newly launched medication has proved successful in other markets and, subject to capacity constraints, could become a blockbuster for the company. The number three contributor to performance was technology, mainly thanks to Infineon (up 12%) in semiconductors, which benefited from medium-term structural demand, with short-term constraints on supply capacity giving it pricing power. The main negative contributor was Enogia, which IPO'd the previous month, mainly due to selling by the general public and Telenor's relative poor performance in a defensive sector.

As regards the main changes in the month, we took profits on Biffa in waste management and Novo Nordisk in healthcare and swapped out Scatec Solar and Orsted in order to increase our position in Acciona Energias, which offers growth potential at a more attractive valuation.
